

THE COLOURFUL MISERY OF PATHOLOGY

Trays are embellished with colorful slides

But only we, the Pathologist are afraid of a new tide

The world is full of colors

Under the microscopes

But only we can see the shades of agony and pain

With thinned out hopes.

The charming red color which reminds you of refreshing rose aroma

Scares us, as it can be large nucleoli of melanoma

Tiny shining brown lamps on roads

Reminds us of High ki67 scores.

Every unusual cell tells a horrible story

May be some cancer or a new misery

But we look under the microscope

With the aim of solving the clinical mystery.

May God give us the strength

To identify these ugly faces of cells, painted with different spells.

Dr. Gunjan Bhatia

Asst. Professor (Pathology)

RNT Medical College, Udaipur